One Day in the Life of Noah Piugattuk, from Director Zacharias Kunuk (Inuit), is based on a 1961 encounter between Noah Piugattuk and his hunting party, and a government emissary who asks them to relocate their families to permanent settlements and send their children to school. While the contrast between the pragmatic Inuit hunting party and the incomprehensible expectations of the government agent provides a measure of cultural comedy, there is an ominous air to the encounter: the agent's demands embody a government policy that will fundamentally change Inuit life as they have known it. The real Noah Piugattuk was born in 1900 and lived to be 96 years old. In that time he saw the decline of traditional practices that had persisted for thousands of years and the creation of a new relationship with the Canadian colonial state. In this one day — and this fateful meeting — Kunuk condenses much about Inuit–settler relations and disparate views of the meaning and importance of place. In Inuktitut with English subtitles. (Isuma, 2019, 113 min.).
